KOHZO DENIM

Shauket Imam, Swiss, the founder of KOHZO DENIM, was fascinated with denim since his childhood. He spent 20 years doing consulting and research work for the world's leading denim manufacturers, starting at the age of 26 at Burlington Industries USA, at that time the main producer for Levi's Jeans. The logical outcome was launching his own jeans label to offer something radically different from existing denim. Entirely made in Japan, KOHZO is named after a tree that is used to produce traditional Japanese paper (washi) and fabrics characterised by a smooth texture and unique strength. Most of today's jeans are made of cotton with synthetic and sulfur dyes, while KOHZO uses totally natural, pure ingredients: washi, hibiscus, bamboo, pineapple, cannabis etc. Washi-based material provides exceptional sweat absorption and insulation, making you feel equally comfortable in warm and cold weather. The dyes consist of indigo, vegetable, natural mud, fruit and charcoal. The fabrics are semi-hand-woven on traditional shuttle looms.
